

Are men responsible for keeping women out of some professions?

History is full of women who have done jobs considered suitable only for men but the number of women in unconventional professions has never been higher. From combat pilots to investigative detectives, the head of the Indian missile programme and a woman who has scaled the world's seven highest peaks, we look at the challenges they face and what eggs them on to achieve the impossible.

Winners of first debate (Gender Pay Gap) from Delhi School of Economics

Watch the debate live at 5PM on February 15 from the S. P. Jain Institute of Management & Research on FB and Twitter

OTHER WAYS TO JOIN THE HALF-A-BILLION DEBATES:

Log on to: www.etwomensforum.com/debates

 On Facebook
/MyETPaper

Twitter
@ETWomensForum

BEST COMMENTS ON THE DEBATE ON GENDER PAY GAP

TANYA
DELHI

I don't think that the women are paid lesser, in fact they are paid equal. Because even I am working in an organisation where women are given higher priority.

VISHAL
MUMBAI

Well, I don't think so because I have seen a couple of my colleagues earn equal and I have also recruited female employees in my company at par with men.

RENU LAMBA @GUYSTWITME

Most of the half a billion women are not skilled enough to perform sophisticated jobs in urban or semi-urban area, I have gone back to work with these women by helping them to get under the ambit of the formal financial system.

ABHINAW @FIGHT4JUSTICE08

#GenderPayGap is a myth because pay is determined based on qualifications, not on gender. If a person is qualified enough, companies will pay more to onboard that person. It's simple economics, #No rocket science

THE ECONOMIC TIMES WOMEN'S FORUM

Partnered by Facebook, the Forum promises to be a fast-paced, multimedia extravaganza. It's a gathering of diverse and influential women of impact from India and abroad.

16 March 2018, Mumbai

To request an invite, visit www.etwomensforum.com